

Great journalism. Great company.

Delano Massey, reporter

Lexington Herald-Leader
Lexington, Kentucky

Some say investigative reporting is dead. We say meet Delano Massey. He's been digging up hard-hitting stories since he arrived as the cops reporter at the Lexington Herald-Leader four years ago.

His investigations have exposed major problems in the way the city of Lexington was awarding disability pensions to police and firefighters, leading to reforms. Earlier this year, his stories got the local district attorney to move forward with a sex abuse case that had languished for more than two years.

It's all part of creating a leading news company for the 21st century. That's why McClatchy looks to NABJ and similar organizations to help ensure that talented professionals always are available.
